March successful, about 5,000 show

Students plead "NO MORE CUTS!"

by Sue Drapeau
Staff Reporter

Despite the cold weather, wind and rain, over 5,000 students, about 500 of them from the Mount, joined in a march to protest the proposed cuts to EPF last Wednesday. EPF, or Established Program Financing is responsible for most of the money forwarded by the federal government to the provinces for financing of programs such as hospitals, health services and Post-Secondary Education.

The march in Halifax was only one of four marches happening simultaneously across the Atlantic. Students from four universities in New Brunswick marched in Fredericton, students from UPEI and Holland College marched in Charlottetown, and students at the Memorial University of Newfoundland rallied in St. John's. Over 8,000 students across the Atlantic marched.

In the Maritimes marches, coffins were carried, signifying the death of Post-secondary education in Canada, and in Halifax, Felicity Boyd, Student Council President at the Technical University of Nova Scotia, read a eulogy over the coffin, praying for the remorse of the government bodies responsible for the death.

Most of the organizers of the march were happy with the turnout. Sandy Spencer, a spokesperson for the Students' Unions of Nova Scotia, (SUNS), said even more people showed up than she had expected. Six institutions were represented at the Halifax March including the Mount, Dalhousie, Saint Mary's, TUNS, Nova Scotia College of Art and Design, and St. Francis Xavier.

Although some students marching were disappointed that there was not more representation from the political parties running in the provincial election this week, most were overjoyed that there was as much recognition from the media as there was of the march and that issue of federal funding did join the topics debated later that night on television in the leaders debate.

The only provincial party leader to put in an appearance at the demonstration was Alexa McDonough, leader of the New Democratic Party. When she tried to read from a prepared speech, she was answered by shouts from the crowd, "Yeah but what are you going to do about it?" After giving up on the prepared speech, McDonough told students that any government that does not consider post-secondary education in this country important, is not thinking of the future when they make rash decisions like cutting budgets.

Tom Regan, the president of the Young Liberal Association spoke on behalf of the Liberal party, since Sandy Cameron, the provincial leader could not be there. His major point was that the liberal party was appalled that the conservative government had not been spending money earmarked for education, on education.

Mike McNeil, chairperson of the National Union of Students (NUS) was probably the most well received speaker by the enthusiastic crowd. He said, "we're not marching for us now but so that education is accessible in the future. Why should only the rich and the children of the rich have an education?" He added that our marches in the Atlantic were only a beginning, that in two weeks, a demonstration was planned for Parliament Hill, and that marches were planned for right across the country.

After the march, a group of about 1,000 decided that for them the march was not over and proceeded to Province House where many of them got through the front doors before the police arrived. Most of the after-march demonstrators stood outside shouting "We want Terry," and waiting to talk to Terry Donahoe, the Education Minister for Nova Scotia.

March organizers were dragged from a quiet lunch downtown to help disperse the crowd at Province House, which was not intended to be part of the march schedule.

One student suggested that the march could have been better organized from that angle.

The student said, "There was no clear indication that the march was over, and that perhaps accounted for some of them going to Province House."

The art gallery is looking for students interested in creating an Art Gallery Club. There will be an organizational meeting on Wednesday, October 7 at 2 p.m. in the art gallery for all interested students.

The Club could be involved with such topics as: conducting tours—the making of videotapes—exhibit installation—poster design and the printing process. There could also be meeting with artists and craftspeople. These are just a few ideas. Bring your own suggestions.

Attention

The Picaro Publishing Board needs student representatives to sit on it.

Are you interested in the workings of the Picaro?

The Board deals with issues affecting the running of the Picaro and its relationship with the Student Council.

The Board meets four or five times a year.

Interested?

Contact the Picaro Office 4th floor Rosaria Centre, 443-4450—195

or

Come to a Picaro staff meeting, Tuesdays, 7 p.m., Coffee Shop, Rosaria Centre

SCM Meeting Coming Up

The next meeting of the Mount Student Christian Movement will take place on Friday, October 9th, in Room 504, Seton. At this meeting we will be brainstorming about what issues we want to cover, and setting priorities for the first semester. Everyone is welcome, needed, appreciated, etc. . . .

Recipes Wanted

Do you know of a good recipe you'd like to share with the world?

As a fund raiser for Project I, a recipe book is being put together and it needs some input from students.

If you have a recipe, please drop it off at the physical Plant office on second level Rosaria Centre. Soon!

First Aid Courses Available

St. John Ambulance will be conducting two day Standard First Aid Courses at Provincial Headquarters, Second Floor, 5516 Spring Garden Road, Halifax, Nova Scotia.

The dates for the courses are October 7 & 8, October 31 & November 1.

For registration or information please call, St. John Ambulance at 454-5826 or 454-5827.

Child Study Workshops Beginning

People who are involved in working with preschool children in a variety of settings will be able to attend a series of Saturday workshops on child study at Mount Saint Vincent University from October 17 to March 6.

The eight workshops will deal with physical activities for preschoolers (October 17); why children are attracted to moving objects (October 31); how children think mathematically (November 14); program planning (November 28); children with special needs (January 30, 1982); creativity through original story-telling (February 13, 1982); and how to tell when children need special help (March 6, 1982).

Each workshop costs only $5 and begins with registration at Room 406 in Seton Academic Centre at 9:00 a.m. The main presentation starts at 9:30 a.m. and lasts until noon, followed by lunch break and discussion.

Further information can be obtained from Edith Shantz, co-ordinator of the series, at 443-4450, ext. 255.

Volunteers Wanted

The Women's Information and Referral Service is looking for volunteers interested in sharing and developing skills in peer counselling and personal growth. The next training session takes place Wednesday, October 7th at 7:30 p.m. at 1225 Barrington St. Please call A Woman's Place, 429-4063 for further information.

At the Gallery

At the Mount art gallery beginning Friday, October 9 and running until November 1 is a new exhibit The Animated Film. This a retrospective of original art work from over 50 National Film Board animated films. For further information please call 443-4450.

At the Gallery

At the Mount art gallery beginning Friday, October 9 until November 1 is a contemporary exhibition of the work of an artisan collective known as Grupo Pira. The exhibit consists of neckpieces and wallhangings from Ecuador. For further information please call 443-4450.

Debating and You

An organizational meeting of the Mount Saint Vincent University Debate Club is to be held on Wednesday, October 9 at 1:00 p.m. in SAC 345. Officers will be elected at this meeting and events for the year discussed. Anyone interested in learning the fine art of debating is cordially invited to attend. CEC Provincial Conference

The 5th annual CEC Provincial Conference will be held at Truro Regional Vocational School on October 23, 1981. This conference is sponsored by CEC Federation 814 and hosted by the Central Nova Chapter.

A number of presentations are scheduled by professionals from various fields. Oral & Written Language Disorders, Teacher Burnout, Behavior Disorders, and A Critical Look at Big Books are among the topics to be discussed.

One of the special attractions for students is a student CEC Chapter Meeting sponsored by the students of Acadia University. The purpose of this meeting is to inform students how they can start their own CEC Student Chapter at their own University. In June of this year students from Acadia formed the first Student Chapter of CEC in Nova Scotia.

Specific issues must be resolved if the right of education for all is to be reflected in a meaningful commitment to and provision of education for every child. It is the responsibility of students to promote standards for professional personnel engaged in the field of education. The members of Acadia Student Chapter are not waiting for tomorrow—they are involved today. They invite you to join them.

For further information please contact Marie Fougere, President, CEC Acadia Student Chapter at 542-2366, or write to Room 102, Horton House, Acadia University, Wolfville, Nova Scotia B0P 1X0.

National President to Speak

Mr. Joseph Cotteau, APR, national president of the Canadian Public Relations Society, will answer questions on public relations practice in Canada at a session for all BPR students on Wednesday, October 7, at 3:05 p.m. in Seton 304.

All BPR students are welcome.

Mr. Cotteau is manager of communications with Gulf Canada in Toronto.

"This is the Law"

The public are invited to attend "This is the Law"—a legal series at the Halifax City Regional Library, 5381 Spring Garden Road to be held on Wednesday evenings at 7:30 p.m. from October 7 to November 4.

On October 7, Linda Garber, solicitor with the Attorney General's Office will speak on the "Law in Small Claims Court", on October 14, "Matrimonial Property Law in Nova Scotia" will be discussed by Professor Allistair Bissett-Johnston, member of the Faculty of Law, Dalhousie University, Nova Scotia Barrister, and editor of MATRIMONIAL PROPERTY LAW IN CANADA. On October 21 "Unemployment Insurance Law" will be discussed by Bill Poveroz, Co-ordinator of the North End Clinic and formerly community legal worker at Dalhousie Legal Aid. On October 28 "Social Assistance Law in Nova Scotia" will be discussed by Andrew Pavey, Community Lawyer at Dalhousie Legal Aid, and on November 4 "Landlord Tenant Law in Nova Scotia" will be discussed by Edna Chambers, staff lawyer of Dalhousie Legal Aid, member of the Nova Scotia Barristers Society and former member of the Halifax and County West Residential Tenancies Board.

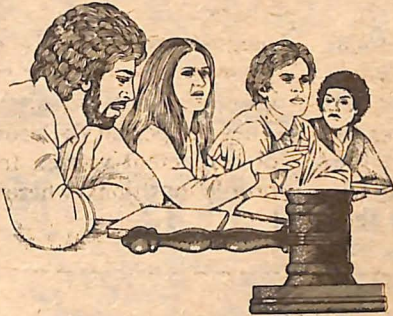

After each presentation there will be time for a question and answer session. Booklets plus copies of brochures concerning community resources will be available.

This program is being co-sponsored by the Halifax City Regional Library and the Public Legal Education Committee of the Continuing Legal Education Society of Nova Scotia through grants from the Law Foundation of Nova Scotia, Federal Department of Justice, through a grant from the Canadian Employment and Immigration Commission.

Funding for research at MSVU up 3400%

Funding for special research projects initiated by Mount Saint Vincent University faculty has jumped a whopping 3400 per cent in less than six years, according to Dr. Wayne Ingalls, Director of Research and Special Projects at the Mount.

Speaking to the first meeting of faculty for the 1981 term, Dr. Ingalls said the tremendous increase in the number of research grants obtained from outside sources could be attributed to a change in attitude on the part of the university's senior administrators and many of its faculty members.

Late in 1974, he said, the Mount set out on a program to increase the research productivity of its faculty. At that time a research administration office was established and funds were allocated for research purposes. Hiring policies were also initiated and the university began to actively recruit faculty with a record for (or a potential for) research productivity.

"The creation of sabbatical leave grants also helped to create a climate which encouraged research," said Dr. Ingalls.

With this kind of serious commitment to support research, a change of attitude on the part of faculty was also required. The Mount was small in comparison to other Canadian universities. Its faculty had heavy teaching loads and no funds available to attract the graduate students required to assist faculty members pursuing research.

"So, at first, Mount researchers doubted they would be able to obtain the funding from external sources required. But after a few initial success stories, attitudes have changed and various important research projects have become a very vital part of the university," said Dr. Ingalls.

Since that time, too, the Mount has shown a tremendous increase in enrolment and there has been a 27 per cent increase in full-time faculty. The total research funding generated by Mount faculty from outside sources since 1974 has increased from $13,000 to $459,500.

Dr. Ingalls, who became the university's Director of Research and Special Projects only two years ago, said research projects underway involve anthropology, biology, business administration, public relations, chemistry, economics, education (child studies), English, mathematics, history, modern languages, sociology, to name only a few.

SUNS expects action on education to come out of provincial election

By Sue Drapeau
Staff Reporter

The Student's Unions of Nova Scotia (SUNS) has been listening carefully to election promises in the upcoming provincial election and they are disappointed to see there hasn't been much in the way of promises that have anything to do with post-secondary education.

"The only leader who has made campaign promises in that vein has been Alexa McDonough, and she is calling for accountability and visibility of the federal funding to education, and where it is actually being spent in the province," said Sandy Spencer, a spokesperson for SUNS.

Spencer said there are several things that SUNS would like to see come out of the upcoming provincial election, especially that whichever party is elected pay a little more attention to students as a very large constituency group in the province.

"The government has to realize that post-secondary education is an industry in Nova Scotia," said Spencer. A lot of people in Nova Scotia rely on post-secondary education for their livelihood, from the Administrators, right down to the Janitorial staff. There is also a very large consumer industry in Nova Scotia which relies on the influx of students, especially in the smaller towns like Wolfville and Antigonish.

Another priority of SUNS is to see that money earmarked for post-secondary education is actually spent there, and not in making the government in power look good by building highways, etc., as the Buchanan government has been accused of doing.

Women encouraged to play greater role in student politics

TORONTO (CUP)—Representatives of the Ontario Federation of Students (OFS) Women's Caucus met delegates from universities and colleges across the province September 25, urging student associations to encourage the participation of women in student politics.

The women's caucus identified the upper echelons of student councils as areas where women are underrepresented in decision-making. An informal affirmative action program, supported by an OFS policy, which would recognize the voting status for only those delegations with at least a 50 per cent representation of women, was presented as a method of redressing this imbalance.

women, the women's caucus suggested that each student association run campaigns to encourage women to enter the political arena. They also recommended the establishment of women's issues campaigns and women's centres where role models and support groups could be promoted. They supported the promotion of competent women to high-profile positions where possible.

Feds accused of avoiding discussion over transfer payment cuts

TORONTO (CUP)—"Cutting $2 billion in transfer payments to the provinces isn't restraint, it is simply having the bills sent to a different address," said Ontario Treasurer Frank Miller, blasting the federal government for not wanting to discuss the transfer payments at an upcoming meeting of the provincial finance ministers.

The proposed cuts by the federal government in the Established Programs Financing scheme would affect funding for universities and health care services. Miller describes this as merely transferring the tax burden from one jurisdiction to another instead of exercising real restraint.

Miller charged that the federal government wanted to talk about the cuts only after they've been made. "We'll (the provincial finance ministers) be called in not to negotiate but to talk about the cuts that have been made. We don't need a trip to Ottawa to pretend to be consulted," he added.

Miller commented that there are "ten united provinces determined to discuss trial balloons that have been put out." At a press conference October 1, he suggested that the federal government will attempt to cut two billion dollars a year for the next five years from transfers.

The caucus presentation to the delegation included a list of barriers which impede women's participation in student politics: financial pressures that women experience at a more extreme level than their male counterparts because of the wage gap between men and women; a lack of political cooperation in some councils with female members; lower career expectations for women; academic pressures on women to remain in university until graduation without missing a year; the lack of positive role models for women; the expectations that women are pressured to conform to after winning elections; and the socialization of women as passive consumers rather than as active politicians.

To raise the level of concern about political participation by

Today is election day Have you voted?

Have you voted yet? If not, the polls are open until 8 pm.

If you weren't enumerated and live in the Halifax/Bedford Basin riding, meaning the one in which the Mount is situated, you still may be able to vote in this riding.

Check with the returning Office for the riding. It's handy for Mount students since it's located at Our Lady of Perpetual Help Church Hall, (you know, that church down by Seton?) and anybody who qualifies to vote but wasn't enumerated can vote there.

If you have a chance to vote in the provincial election today and don't, then your vote will have been wasted. There are enough students in Halifax that we can make a difference in the way the election results happen.

So, let's make it happen, and don't forget to vote.

Editorial

Protest march a waste of time?

"No More Cuts, No More Cuts!" "They say cutback, we say fight back."

These cries echoed through the streets of Halifax last Wednesday as thousands of university students banded together to protest against planned EPF cutbacks to post-secondary education.

It was an amazing show of solidarity among students, but the question is, was our march last week a positive and productive step in stopping the re-allocation of funds, or simply a futile attempt to be heard which will most likely take us nowhere?

I hate to say it but I think it's door number 2, folks.

That doesn't mean that the march itself did not go well. You can't say that over 5,000 students marching in a more or less orderly fashion, chanting in unison, and waving hundreds of brightly coloured signs went unnoticed that day. It was quite an impressive sight. However, the mere fact that not one government representative appeared to speak on the matter proves one thing to me. The government is not too concerned with what students want or need.

Sure, there were representatives from various political parties, (Alexa McDonough (NDP) and Tom Regan (Lib.)) who showed up to prove they care. But, would it be too critical of me to say that if it was not for a provincial election taking place in this province, they probably would have stayed in bed? From their point of view, our gathering at the parade grounds was a potential election platform where a few more votes could be secured.

Unfortunately for them, they didn't tell us anything we didn't already know and it was precisely for this reason that we converged in large numbers on the provincial legislature, demanding to see provincial Education Minister, Terry Donahoe.

We got no official response that time, but did succeed in shaking loose a few hinges on the front doors of Province House.

There is a glimmer of hope in this otherwise morbid piece of writing. The government of Nova Scotia has said they are opposed to the cutbacks, which is, in essence, a step in the right direction. Whether or not that means anything is another story. It depends on how hard the province works to prevent the proposed re-allocation from going through. It could be just the government's way of trying to shut us up, and therefore to avoid a repeat of last week's demonstration.

Time will tell. Meanwhile, let's not forget what we're fighting for.

Congrats on showing solidarity

To the Editor—

On behalf of the Students Union of Nova Scotia, I would like to congratulate the students of Nova Scotia on their show of solidarity displayed September 30th.

The students that participated in the march obviously showed the governments that our education will make the difference in Canada's future. On October 1, the Chronicle-Herald/Mail-Star carried a front page story stating that the province will oppose the $1.5 billion cut.

I would like to thank all of the students who took the time to help us voice our concerns. I would also like to thank Karen Stone, Mike McNeil, Rob McLellan, John Logan, Jerome MacIsaac, Felicity Boyd and everyone else who worked so hard over the summer to make the day a success.

Remember—keep the fight going! Unfortunately, it is not over yet. Continue to voice your concern, whether it be through a letter to Allan J. MacEachren (the Minister of Finance) or by voting on October 6 and making your vote count.

Sincerely,

Sandy K. Spencer

Opinion

Don't let your guard down

by Sue Drapeau
Staff Reporter

The response from last Wednesday's march against EPF cuts was certainly encouraging. However, my enthusiasm is cautious, if anything.

The day after over 8,000 students across the Atlantic marched to signify their awareness and concern over the issue of a possible cut of $1.5 billion from post-secondary education funding, the provincial government in Nova Scotia came out with a statement that they were against the proposed federal cuts. The Chronicle Herald considered the story a big enough one to put it on page one.

Like I said before though, my enthusiasm over the response is very cautious. After all, there is a provincial election going on in Nova Scotia and there are a lot of students who could be potential voters in this province.

I don't mean to discourage everyone so soon after they made such a good showing at the march last Wednesday, but this is only the beginning. We can never let the government forget about any statements of support they have made. Continue reminding them and the public that we, the students are concerned for the future of post-secondary education in Canada, and we're not doing it for us, because most of us will be finished our education before the crunch really hits. We're doing it for potential future students; so that they can afford higher education too!

Let the signer beware

While on the topic of being cautious, have you ever joined a cause, signed a petition or got enthusiastic about a cause, only later to discover that the cause had a political leaning that didn't suit your method of action. There are groups that come to campus from time to time touting a cause which is guaranteed to appeal to large groups of students and can easily gather momentum on a campus without the students looking very deeply into the political idealisms behind an organization.

I found myself on the edge of disillusionment the other day when the coalition against the KKK had a table set up in Rosaria Centre and many students, including myself, signed the petition, automatically thinking it was a good cause. It was later brought to my attention that the group's effectiveness was less than credible, and that they were using public opinion on this issue to bolster a political ideal. Of course I was a little skeptical until I saw people from this same group who had set up the table in Rosaria, distributing copies of a newspaper on campus called "In Struggle", the communication organ for the Communist Party of Canada/Marxist Leninist (CPC/ML).

I do not question the validity of advancing a cause such as banning the KKK but I find it hard to understand a politically partisan nature to such a cause. Most causes such as this can appeal to the sense of any citizen, no matter what political beliefs.

The second thing I find hard to accept is that a political organization not identify itself clearly from the outset. If they had, it would have been a lot easier to make a rational decision about supporting a cause and thinking out all the ramifications of the political angle the issue holds.

So, I guess the moral of the story is that no matter how just the cause, we still have to be critical of the motivations behind a particular group sponsoring that cause. Let the signer beware.

Acadia students attacked by "Townies"

WOLFVILLE (CUP)—Two students from Acadia University were assaulted on campus by a group of non-university youth.

The incident occurred Saturday, September 12. Two male students and one female student were walking across campus when they were assaulted by seven or eight people from the town. The two men were seriously injured and required hospitalization, but the woman was not harmed.

The incident is believed to be a manifestation of the tensions felt between university students and the youth from Wolfville.

The university administration is very concerned about the incident, and are looking into measures to prevent similar occurrences in future.

Dr. Perkins, acting president of the university, said the town police were investigating the incident and expected to lay charges in the near future.

Two extra commissioners were put on duty the week following the incident to help patrol the campus, and the town police have increased their surveillance as well.

According to Bruce Cohoon, the assistant director of information services, "the university is in the process of seriously reviewing our security plans and operations."

Perkins wants students to take precautions to avoid further violence. He suggested that female students should keep to lighted pathways and not walk alone, and that the presence of non-students at student events should be reported.

From now on, campus commissioners will be asking students to present university IDs on campus.

VINNIES GOING GREAT

by Chris Williams
Staff Reporter

The two week old Vinnie's Pub is doing great business attracting beer tilters from across the campus to its warm atmosphere of social and recreational entertainment and relaxation.

Bob Williamson, a first year public relations student and head of the pub's 15 member staff has been bartending on and off for the past four or five years.

"Things have been going well at Vinnies," said Williamson taking a puff from a wine dipped cigar. "The busiest times are on Wednesdays during the Booze and Blues hours".

Two new video games, with all your favorite explosions and sound effects, are waiting for all those with ample quarters and button-pressing addictions at the rear of the pub.

Student Council President Karen Stone says there are future additions to the pub.

"Student Council is installing a 20 inch color television as soon as a security box is built for it", Stone said. "We will also add several cribbage and backgammon games. We'd like to see the room active in the daytime as well as nights".

The Student Council has also purchased 300 dollars worth of record albums which will be arriving soon.

Both Stone and Williamson encourage members of the faculty and administration to stop in at Vinnies. "We are not out to make a profit", Stone says. "We feel that the success of the pub will be determined by its use. We appreciate any suggestions. The Student Council wants to offer things students are interested in".

During drinking hours only persons of 19 years or older are permitted in the pub and should be prepared to show acceptable I.D. upon request. During dry hours everyone is invited to stare at the ugly curtains.

Try these taste sensations:

TUNA TORPEDOES

Use any type of bread or rolls, such as toasted english muffin halves, french loaf split in half, kaizer rolls halved, toasted whole wheat bread or chapati (flat East Indian style bread). You can use canned salmon or chopped ham in place of tuna. Serve with soup and a crisp green salad.

1 can (6-12 oz) flaked tuna drained

1/4 cup plus 2 tbsp.
mayonnaise
2 tbsp. chopped green or purple onion
1-1/2 tsp. prepared mustard
1/4 tsp. worchestershire sauce
2 kaizer rolls, split in half
1/4 cup grated cheddar cheese

In a small bowl, combine tuna, 1/4 cup mayonnaise, onion, mustard, and worchestershire sauce; spread over rolls, combine remaining 2 tb-sp. mayonnaise with cheese and spread over top. Broil 4" from heat until topping puffs and brown. Makes 2 servings.

SCRAMBLED EGG FOYUNG

This is a handy recipe when you forget to take something out of the freezer, are in a hurry or have vegetables to use up.

3 tbsp. butter or margarine

1 small onion, chopped
1 stalk celery thinly sliced and/or a half green pepper, chopped
4 mushrooms, sliced
1/2 cup bean sprouts
1/4 tsp. salt
pinch pepper
4 eggs, beaten

Heat 2 tbsp. butter in frying pan over medium heat. Fry onions and celery until almost tender, about 3 or 4 minutes. Add green pepper (if using) and mushrooms and cook for one minute; stir in bean sprouts. Stir vegetables mixture salt and pepper and 2 beaten eggs. Heat remaining 1 tbsp. butter in same frying pan; pour in egg mixture. Cook and slowly stir egg mixture until eggs are set but still slightly moist. Serve with muffins or toast. Makes 2 servings.

New kinds of students swelling the ranks of part-time

An amateur botanist now taking a biology degree; a young mother with babies to care for; a fireman working shifts at night and studying by day—these are the kinds of people who are swelling the ranks of part-time students at Mount Saint Vincent University.

Jean Hartley, associate registrar at the Mount, says, "it's the biggest part-time enrolment we've ever had. I remember in 1970 when our part-time students numbered about 200. This fall we're already up to 1,033 with the largest proportion of part-time students of any university in Halifax."

They include secretaries, businessmen, nurses, members of the armed forces and the police, young mothers, middle-aged housewives and grandparents. The diversity in occupation and age is noteworthy—a mix of young and old from early twenties to sixty-plus. It makes for a fascinating university community and it's working well.

Dr. Mairi Macdonald, Director of the Centre for Continuing Education at the Mount says, "Our part-time students are treated with just as much consideration as our full-time ones. Many of them are now taking credit courses because they had initially been attracted to the university by a non-credit offering."

The part-timers are usually very committed people. A number of them are women with tiny children, sometimes taking three courses.

Registration of full-time students at the Mount this fall has now reached 1,520, up from last year by about 100 students, with more expected during the next week or so.

Part-time enrolment is exceptionally high this early in the university year. More are expected to register before the end of the month, bringing the figures up even higher.

The Seton centre—tribute to a founder

by Malcolm MacBeath

The Seton Academic Centre, which opened in 1971, was named in honour of Saint Elizabeth Seton, the founder of the Sisters of Charity.

Saint Seton was born in New York City on August 28, 1774. Her mother died when she was just 3 years old, and consequently her father became a very important figure in her life. He remarried and it was her stepmother that first gave her a strong religious influence. She got much of her formal education from her father because New York did not have much in the line of educational facilities in those days.

She was married to William Seton at the age of 19 and lived a happy life until 1801 when her much loved father died. She had barely recovered from the grief of this tragedy, when in 1803 her husband took ill and died.

It was while her husband was ill that they went to Italy in hopes of saving his health, and she came into close contact with the Catholic faith. She was introduced to it by old family friends, the Filicchis, and by the time she returned to New York she had decided to convert.

This decision did not take well with her Episcopalian relatives, however this could not stop her and in 1805 she became Catholic.

She eventually found herself at the place that was to become the centre of the Sisters of Charity movement in North America, a valley near Emmitsburg in the Blue Ridge Mountains. The religious community there adopted the rules of Saint Vincent de Paul, with a few important alterations, the most notable, being a primary concern for education. Saint Seton eventually became the head of this organization through her hard work and devotion.

Although she died in 1821 her movement continued to grow and eventually, in 1849 reached Halifax, with the founding of an orphanage.

Questions

- 1) Did you go to the protect march last Wednesday?
- 2) Do you like the name Vinnie's for the student pub?

Kathleen Heron

1. No, actually I didn't know much about it.
2. Nothing really, it's not boring and it's not exciting, it's just "Vinnie's".

Patty Kling

1. No, I didn't march because I had a class, but I think it was a real good cause.
2. It's OK.

Jennifer Doyle

1. No, I had an important class.
2. It sounds like it took about three seconds to think it up. I know these things, I'm a P.R. student!

Cheryl McCarron

1. No, I have a really heavy workload.
2. It's not very creative; it sounds like something you would hear on a soap opera.

Rose Verleun

1. Yes I did and I think that there was a good turnout. Maybe the march wasn't the best way to go about it, but it certainly was a good cause.
2. Well, I haven't given it much thought, but I think they could have picked something a little more exciting.

King Croft

1. Yes, I think it's a great cause. This cutback is going to hurt our education a lot.
2. I think it's great since I was one of the guys who helped pick it.
